EXCELLENCE IN Entrepreneurship
We all understand the importance of strong personal and professional relationships. As we’ve experienced, relationships require work by both parties to be successful. The more you put into fostering your connections, the more fulfilling, productive and rewarding they are. Continual communication, support and interaction are critical for any relationship to work.

These same principles apply to the relationship you have with your banker. Below are some tips on finding the right banking relationship and making it work – specifically making it work for you and your business.

Finding the Right Banker
You may already know and work with a banker that you like and trust. That’s great – just review the other tips below to ensure you are getting the most out of that relationship.

If you don’t have that relationship already, take the time to find the bank and banker that will work best for you. Identify banks in your community that have small business services and bankers that handle small business relationships. Ask other business owners and your other professional advisers for their recommendations. Look for a banker that understands your type of business, your target customers and the local area and region where your business operates.

Initial Meeting
Stop by or call the banks you have indentified. Let them know you are looking for a banking relationship for your small business and would like to set up a meeting to discuss your needs. At that meeting, clearly lay out your business and financial plans and articulate your short and long-term goals. Request that your banker takes this information and comes back to you with suggestions for financial tools, resources and products that will help you meet your needs and accomplish these goals. Compare what each bank offers you and decide on which one you feel is the best fit for your business.

Banking is about More Than Credit
Don’t lose sight of the fact that banks offer more than credit and loan options. Banks can help you with services to manage your funds and information to help you grow your business. Beyond a checking account, your banker should be able to offer other cash management tools, online services, credit card processing for payment, payroll management, investments and other services. Also, many banks now offer online tools and resources for your business beyond banking. These include tips and expert advice on everything from marketing and human resources to social media and ecommerce.

Colleagues of Your Banker
It is a smart idea to get to know the people at your local branch apart from your personal banker. Get to know the branch manager, tellers and other staff. The more they know about you and your business’s financial needs, the better they will be able to help you and serve as a back-up to your banker. Likewise, make sure that your office and financial staff know your banker and know how to reach them.

Ongoing Evaluation
Be sure you and your banker are both clear on your financial goals. Evaluate these at least a few times a year with formal meetings – either with in-person or phone conversations. Email is convenient, but a personal connection helps build a strong long-term connection. Most importantly, these check-ins provide a great opportunity to access your needs, how these needs may have changed and make any necessary adjustments.

The right banking relationship can not only make your life easier, it can also help you effectively manage and grow your business. It’s essential to find the right banker for your company. Then take the initiative to leverage and foster the relationship to get the most out of it.

Assisting Clients in Achieving Their Goals
or many in healthcare, this year will be a turning point in our nation’s history, since it marks the official beginning of the paperless era. It has been a work in progress, with much headway made since September 2010, when the U.S. government released the final, long-awaited details on the specific rules and regulations associated with the shift toward an electronic healthcare system, as part of the previously announced 2009 American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA).

Initially, in February 2009, the ARRA was passed into law by Congress. A component of the Obama Administration’s overall economic stimulus plan, the ARRA calls for more than $250 billion in incentives to be dedicated to the HIT sector, pursuant to the Health Information Technology for Economic and Clinical Health Act (HITECH). This includes more than $19 billion allocated to aid healthcare entities as they strive to advance their operations through the implementation of HIT solutions. A portion of that amount – $17.2 billion – has been allocated to HIT infrastructure relating to Medicare/Medicaid incentives for physicians and hospitals.

The portions of the stimulus plan dedicated to Federally Qualified Healthcare Centers ($1.5 billion) and Indian Health Services ($85 million) commenced distribution during the second half of 2009. Quality Systems was already experienced in these areas, having served each for the past 18 years. The majority of the funds allocated under the stimulus plan laid into physician incentives began at the onset of 2011 when those physicians that demonstrated “Meaningful Use” (government-approved use) of EHR on a government-certified system. While the definition of “meaningful use” and the standards for government certification were finalized in late 2010, Quality Systems was already well-positioned to meet the long-awaited requirements. The definitions include, among others: e-prescribing capability; the ability to electronically exchange health information to improve quality and promote care coordination; and the capability to report on clinical quality measures. Stage 2 Meaningful Use criteria were also recently established. All the incentives will continue to be offered to the medical community through this year.

Already, much of the industry has shifted toward transitioning to electronic health records (EHR). In fact, 2/3 of our nation’s physicians have already adopted EHR. Quality Systems, a pioneer in helping medical practices automate their businesses, already serves more than 4,000 practices and hospitals, which spans in excess of 80,000 physicians and dentists.

Nearly 40 years ago, Quality Systems chairman, Sheldon Razin, identified the need for automating medical and dental practices; a vision he first saw in the 1970s and a path he and senior management have been carefully plotting since the company’s inception.

Quality Systems and its NextGen Healthcare subsidiary develop and market computer-based practice management and revenue cycle management applications as well as connectivity products and services for medical and dental group practices and small hospitals. The company is a leader in the EHR sector, and its products are CCHIT Certified®, meaning they have been certified for use by the Certification Commission for Health Information Technology, a leading independent, 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization with the public mission of accelerating the adoption of robust, interoperable health information technology. The Commission has been certifying electronic health record technology since 2006.

Paperless Prowess Throughout 2012, ARRRA incentives were provided to those physicians and medical practices that adopted implementation of EHR and incorporated systems that communicate with each other to keep patient information confidential, seamless, current and interactive amongst all constituents including healthcare providers, payors and patients.

The extraordinary sea-change that is occurring in our healthcare system will positively impact how medicine is practiced, paid for, reimbursed and delivered in our payors and patients. Practices that adopted implementation of EHR and incorporated systems that are CCHIT Certified®, meaning they have been certified for use by the Certification Commission for Health Information Technology, a leading independent, 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization with the public mission of accelerating the adoption of robust, interoperable health information technology. The Commission has been certifying electronic health record technology since 2006.

Healthcare providers that participated in early EHR adoption were eligible to receive up to $44,000. According to the ARRA, physicians that are entitled to the full $44,000 each will see these dollars distributed annually in five increments. Currently, 20 percent of the nation’s healthcare systems have adopted EHR. It is the U.S. government’s intent that the remaining 80 percent will operate on electronic medical platforms by the desired 2015 date. Medicare reimbursement penalties for non-compliant HIT are expected to begin in this year. The government believes 75 percent of the stimulus spending will have occurred between 2011 and 2013.

Arming the Forces Quality Systems has been preparing for this dynamic period, and over the past few years has been dedicated to expanding its network through the hiring of additional employees to prepare. The growth in its employee network was due to the vast opportunities that lie ahead in the HIT sector.

To prepare, the company added staff across its sales, marketing, implementation and training departments. In addition, the company completed several acquisitions of complementary platforms to help arm itself with the capabilities necessary to serve this changing healthcare electronic marketplace. Now, with 2,400 employees worldwide, Quality Systems is well-armed with a team that stands ready to provide all the key tools needed to succeed in this paperless landscape.

The Right Prescription In anticipation of the release of the government’s regulations, Quality Systems has restructured the company operationally, establishing several clearly defined business units and appointing experienced leadership to head each of them. These strategic initiatives allowed Quality Systems and its team to capitalize on what is expected to be a substantial opportunity for leveraging additional market share amid this growing electronic healthcare landscape.

With the increased need and demand for EHRs resulting from the ARRA, Quality Systems spent the past several years preparing by:

► Ramping up its sales and training staff
► Completing seven acquisitions in three years to round out the scope of its products and service offering in preparation of the upcoming sea-change in healthcare
► Increasing employee base by hundreds, bringing the current employee base to 2,400
► Creating five divisions from two – medical, dental, electronic data interchange (EDI), RCM and acute care
► Appointing new management members to enhance the senior leadership team
► Ensuring delivery of ancillary products and services that complement its award-winning EHR solution

With a strengthened management team and specifically defined business units, Quality Systems is well positioned to serve the market with its innovative portfolio of products and services that cater to meeting the evolving needs of a changing healthcare delivery system. Its 26 different plug-and-play modules span all physician specialties for EHR and are believed to be the broadest offering in the sector. Its award-winning products and services bring cutting-edge solutions to users.

Looking ahead, Quality Systems continues to reach a diversified customer base through cutting-edge offerings of multiple innovative products and services that cater to medical, dental and ambulatory practices, as well as small hospitals. From its various business units, the company creates customized solutions based on the individual needs of its rapidly growing client base, whether it is a small hospital, a management services organization, a growing dental enterprise, a large physician group practice or an expansive health system.

HIT: The Root of it All During its nearly 40 years in operation, the vision to automate medical and dental practices has become a successful reality through organic growth and acquisition. Today, that reality continues to guide the company and shape both the HIT sector as well as the nation’s future electronic-based healthcare delivery system.

Quality Systems’ growth is continually recognized, and it is considered among the fastest-growing HIT companies in the sector by investment community analysts, third-party organizations and industry trade associations. Quality Systems ranked again on Forbes’ list of “America’s 200 Best Small Companies” – recognized for the 12th consecutive year. In addition, the company ranked again on Forbes’ list of “America’s Fastest-Growing Tech Companies.” It also has earned several American Business Awards, International Business Awards and BestinBiz awards for its management and team efforts, innovative solutions and marketing strides.

After its reorganization and preparation for the future opportunities that lie ahead, Quality Systems is optimally positioned to capture additional market share and capitalize on the immediate right-place, right-time opportunity afforded it by the ARRA. As the company remains focused on aiding physicians, medical groups and dental practices as they enter the digital age by presenting them with next-generation products and services, it expects the years ahead will be filled with continually advancing technologies and much broader EHR adoption.

The digitalization of healthcare has arrived and Quality Systems – with its nearly 40 years in operation – is well positioned to help drive this paperless era.

Sunwest Bank Helps Orange County Entrepreneurs Grow Their Businesses

Growing a Family Business for the Next Generation

Sunwest Bank: Can you tell me a little bit about your business and its success?
Ruth DeNault: In 1953, my husband and I came to San Clemente and found what we thought was temporary work at a small, local hardware store. The town was beginning to grow, but at the time, it was just 3,500 people and there was no freeway. After a few years in the area, we decided to start our own hardware store business and signed a lease on a store in January 1956. We raised the funds for this initial investment with the help of our friends, family and some of our wholesale suppliers.

For nearly 20 years, we had just one location in San Clemente. Then in 1972, we acquired a small, struggling hardware store in San Juan Capistrano. And in 1976, we expanded again through the acquisition of additional land in another part of San Juan Capistrano. Today, DeNault’s operates five retail stores throughout Orange and San Diego Counties and one commercial division, which is managed through our corporate headquarters in Rancho Santa Margarita and sells supplies to condominiums and large apartment complexes. With the growth in the rental market, we saw an opportunity to capitalize on the expanding market and provide these organizations with the supplies they need to successfully operate their properties.

As a result of our expansion and continued success in the area, we’ve been able to create a true family business. All four of our sons, Bob, Steve, Don and Tom, joined the family business early on and are working together to help ensure the success of the company for the next generation.

SB: How has Sunwest Bank helped you grow your business?
RD: The biggest way that the Bank has helped us to be successful is by understanding our business. Our relationship manager, Jim Martin, really knows our business backwards and forwards. He not only comprehends the financials of the stores, but he also understands our family and the business’ legal status, among other things. He has watched the business work through both successful and challenging times, and has been there to help us make important financial decisions. He has become a valued advisor for our business, and most importantly, he has confidence in us and our business plan.

To help us achieve this goal, we recently refinanced several of our business properties through Sunwest Bank. As a result, we have significantly more profitability and more capital to invest back into our business. Now, we can invest more in growing our business for the family’s next generation. DeNault’s is a true family business. With the help of our banking partner, our sons have helped us to expand the business, and now our grandchildren are helping us to ensure the business’ future.

SB: As an entrepreneur, what is the most rewarding part of your business?
RD: As longtime members of the South County community, we love being able to give back to the community – both through the business and our philanthropic activities. It’s very rewarding when customers share their positive feedback with us and tell us how pleased they are with the help, the customer service and product knowledge that we provide through our stores. The big-box stores don’t specialize in relationships. Our customers come into our stores, and we know most of them by name and consider them friends. We make it a point to give back to our local neighborhoods through community organizations and philanthropies, such as the Little League, YMCA, and Boys and Girls Club.

As a business built on relationships with our customers and community, we look for business partners that also place value on relationships. Sunwest Bank and our relationship manager have proved time and again that they value relationships – both with their customers and the communities in which they operate.

SB: What advice would you give to other entrepreneurs looking to develop a banking relationship?
RD: First, you must have confidence and determination. You need to have a very solid business plan. Having a well-thought-out business plan will help you to successfully navigate the first few years of your business, which can often be the most challenging. Even with a plan in place, you must be nimble when you need to be. Once you have all of this in place, you need to make sure that you find a banking partner that totally and completely understands your plan and your goals. You need to develop a true partnership with your bank. Our business has been successful in part because of the great relationship we have with our bank. A great banking relationship has been essential for us and is something that all entrepreneurs should develop.

Helping a Young Entrepreneur to Achieve His Business Goals

Sunwest Bank: Can you tell me a little bit about your business and its success?
Scott Slater: Right out of college, a friend and I started a hot dog stand and deli business outside of Home Depot, with locations in the Bay Area, Las Vegas, New York and Phoenix. We ran the business for five years, but closed as a result of the recession. That’s when Slater’s 50/50 became a reality. I found a location in Anaheim Hills and collaborated with my chef to create the signature 50/50 burger patty. The idea for the patty came from the burgers that I grill at Charger tailgates. After a long Saturday night, many guests wanted to incorporate bacon into their meal, but we weren’t able to BBQ the bacon. So, I decided to incorporate ground pork belly into the hamburger meat, solving the problem and creating something delicious in the process.

In 2009, Slater’s 50/50 was also integral in the success of Slater’s 50/50, a Southern California-based burger and beer restaurant started by Scott Slater in 2009. Hear firsthand from Ruth DeNault, who with her four sons owns DeNault’s and Scott Slater, founder of Slater’s 50/50, as they tell the story of their businesses and how a strong banking relationship has helped to propel them to success.

SB: How has Sunwest Bank helped you grow your business?
SS: Sunwest Bank has been instrumental in our growth pattern. After successfully opening and operating my first three locations, I was looking for additional financing. Sunwest Bank was able to help structure the financing for our fourth, fifth and sixth restaurants. We are currently working with the Bank on future business projects.

SB: What made Sunwest Bank the most attractive option for you in trying to grow your business?
SS: Sunwest Bank was able to deliver when other banks could not and, as such, made it possible for my business to expand. They have been a great partner throughout the process, and now we use them for banking and for deposits in addition to financing. What makes Sunwest Bank particularly appealing to me is that they’re a local, regional bank. They didn’t just look at my numbers; they actually got to know me and my concept. They took a long-term approach and saw a good concept with growth potential. Being a smaller bank, Sunwest Bank was able to have better exposure and see beyond P&Ls.

SB: As an entrepreneur, what is the most rewarding part of your business?
SS: Having multiple locations is certainly rewarding. Walking into those locations and seeing people enjoying something that I created is probably the most rewarding aspect of my business.

SB: What advice would you give to other entrepreneurs looking to develop a banking relationship?
SS: It’s not all about the bank, it’s about the bankers. Let us help you grow your business. Call our President and CEO Chris Walsh at 714.730.4444 or www.SunwestBank.com

Thinking of Expanding Your Business? Consider the Following Sources of Capital

by Gordon S. MacLean, Partner and Director of Audit Services, and Sam Lahham, Audit Senior Manager, RJI

Are you thinking about expanding your business? If so, you are probably weighing numerous options. Whether it is a matter of extending the runway or taking your business to the next level, you will need to make the right decision.

Debt financing is the most common option. Most entrepreneurs prefer debt financing because there is no loss of ownership or control of the company. Banks and credit unions offer a myriad of financing options, such as lines of credit and term loans. A line of credit is best suited to address short-term liquidity issues. A term loan is usually for a specific purpose (e.g., financing a piece of equipment or making a property acquisition). Many entrepreneurs choose Small Business Administration (SBA) loans. It is important to note that the SBA does not make direct loans to small businesses. Rather, the SBA sets the guidelines for loans, which are then funded by local financial institutions. The SBA’s role is to guarantee that these loans will be repaid, thus eliminating some of the risk. SBA guaranteed loans are generally not available to small businesses if the company has access to other financing on reasonable terms. Debt financing often comes with certain financial performance and reporting requirements. Banks and credit unions will often require the company to meet or exceed pre-determined financial covenants, as well as, have the financial statements compiled, reviewed or audited by an independent CPA firm. Banks and credit unions come in all shapes and sizes, from international institutions with worldwide reach, to community banks that are committed to serving a certain constituency. It is important to choose the right financial institution, as there are pros and cons to each type.

Private equity financing is another common source of funds for entrepreneurial companies looking to expand. This covers angel investors, venture capital firms and private equity firms. Angel investors tend to get involved in the very early stages, usually investing into startup companies. Commonly, angel investors are individuals; however, there are numerous firms that engage in these type of early stage investments. Venture capital firms tend to get involved once a startup has become more established. Transactions with venture capital firms tend to be more complex since they involve institutional investors in a more structured setting. Private equity firms tend to get involved in the later stages of a company’s lifecycle. Most commonly, private equity firms are involved in exit strategies resulting in an acquisition of the entire company. However, in many cases, private equity firms only acquire a portion of the company and become a strategic partner for the ownership and management group of the business. Typically, a member of the private equity firm becomes a board member of the company. In this case, a level of control and decision making capacity is lost; however, many entrepreneurs tend to benefit from this sort of private equity partnership through the experience and guidance offered by the private equity group.

Public equity financing is another option for some companies. This is commonly achieved by one of two ways: an initial public offering (IPO) or a reverse merger. An initial public offering is the process of taking common equity shares of a privately held company and making them available for sale to the public. A reverse merger is a less costly process by which a private company is acquired by a company that is already publicly traded (usually a “shell company” without any significant operations). Both of these options can be fairly costly, involve a loss of control and require registration with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC).

For those looking to avoid the extensive registration and filing requirements that come with issuing new equity to the public, there is a possible exemption. Under the Securities Act of 1933, any offer to sell securities must either be registered with the SEC or meet an exemption. Regulation D contains rules which provide certain exemptions from the registration requirements, allowing these companies to offer and sell their securities without having to register them with the SEC.

With all forms of equity financing comes a reduction of your ownership, which often means a reduction in your control. This may or may not be an appealing option for some entrepreneurs.

Lastly, in recent years, crowdfunding has become a viable option for entrepreneurs to fund their companies. There are three main types of crowdfunding for businesses: reward based, debt and equity. Reward based funding is the most common of the three, which simply offers investors an incentive in exchange for participation. An example of this would be a voucher for a free appetizer via a campaign that is funding an entrepreneur who wishes to open a restaurant. It is important to note that contributions to reward crowdfunding are essentially considered donations. This does not provide any guarantee or obligation from the company to the investor. Debt crowdfunding serves as an alternative to banks and credit unions. Currently, there are limited options since debt crowdfunding for businesses is still in the infancy stage. Frankly, many of the debt crowdfunding sites do not make the case for a better alternative to traditional financial institutions. Equity crowdfunding has yet to reach its full potential due to the current state of legislation on the matter. Pursuant to the Jumpstart Our Business Startups (JOBS) Act, which was signed into law on April 5, 2012, the SEC is currently drafting the rules and regulations that will impact equity crowdfunding. The SEC intends to adequately protect investors without imposing overly burdensome regulations. With all types of crowdfunding, it is important to gauge the level of risk involved and to clearly understand the compliance requirements imposed by all involved parties.

There is no easy decision when it comes to which source of capital is right for you. It is important to involve your CPA or other trusted business partner or advisor in the early stages to ensure you understand the requirements, timing, costs and tax implications, as well as, regulatory requirements of each available option.

Cresa has created a statistical model to forecast demand for office space based on employment. With this proprietary model, Cresa is able to forecast the demand for office space with accuracy well beyond conventional trend analysis. Cresa has used the model, coupled with available information on office space supply, to forecast key Orange County office market statistics. Cresa uses this information to provide leadership to its clients regarding real estate matters.

MARKET DYNAMICS

STRONG EMPLOYMENT GROWTH. Orange County employment has undergone a dramatic turnaround since the depths of the Great Recession. Since topping out at almost 10.0% in early 2010, the County-wide unemployment rate has fallen to below 4.5% as of December. Employment has increased by over 135,000 jobs (up 9.5%) during this period. [See Chart One – Orange County Employment]

Employment growth is the key driver behind demand for office space. Other important factors include the proportion of total employment to employment in the office sector, and space use per employee. Cresa’s exclusive focus on tenant needs provides us with unique insight into these factors. We find that in Orange County, the percentage of employment in the office sector has been increasing while the space use per employee has been declining. This dynamic has had a factor in the demand for additional space and has had a dramatic effect on how slowly the vacancy rates have dropped for the past several years.

MINIMAL NEW SUPPLY. Meanwhile, office construction activity has been at an historically low level [See Chart Two – Office Space Inventory and Completions] with just 2.4 million square feet delivered over the past 60 months. To put this in perspective, over the 60 months of the previous construction downturn, 2002 through 2006, 6.6 million square feet were delivered.

VACANCY RATE DOWN, RENTS STARTING TO RISE SIGNIFICANTLY. The demand-supply dynamic has led to steadily falling vacancy rates, down from a high of 15.9% in early 2010 to 10.9% at year-end 2014. Lease rates are up moderately, rising from a low of $1.83 per square foot per month, full-service (asking rate) in late 2012 to $2.02 as of year-end 2014, up 10.4%.

FORECAST

CONTINUED STRONG EMPLOYMENT GROWTH. Cresa projects that Orange County employment growth will remain significantly positive over at least the next three years. Orange County will have made up all the jobs lost during the recession by early 2015. Cresa forecasts employment growth in excess of 90,000 through the end of 2017. [See Chart Three – Projected Employment]

SIGNIFICANT SUPPLY COMING ON LINE ... BUT NOT RIGHT AWAY. Orange County developers have in excess of 11 million square feet of under-construction, planned, or proposed office space in the pipeline. While new construction will eventually lead to rising vacancy rates and stabilize lease rates, Cresa projects that significant new supply will not come on line before 2017.

STEEPLY RISING RENTS. With strong and rising demand for space (employment) and inadequate supply (new construction), prices will rise. As existing office space oversupply has been absorbed, the pressure on lease rates has increased. The environment is ripe for significant price (lease rate) increases. Cresa forecasts that rates will rise by more than 20% over the next 24 months with asking rate increasing to over $2.40 per square foot per month, full service. (See Chart Four – Vacancy and Lease Rates)

IMPLICATIONS FOR TENANTS

Rising on-going real estate costs – With asking lease rates rising in excess of 20% over the next two years, real estate expenses for tenants signing new leases will increase, significantly for some real-estate intensive businesses. In addition to higher starting rates, leases will likely have higher annual rent increases.

Narrowing lease rates bid-ask spread – Actual transaction lease rates have been 5% to 15% below asking rates in recent years. This trend will narrow, likely falling to the 0% to 5% range. Shrinking concessions – Free rent, allowances, parking cost, and other concessions not included in the lease rates will shrink or disappear.

Longer lead times – With fewer spaces available in the near-term, more time will be required to find good matches of space needs to available space. Also, striking deals earlier on the rising rent curve will yield savings.

Non-lease occupancy structures – Larger requirements may need to consider occupancy scenarios that are not traditional leases including self-develop, build-to-suit, pre-lease JV, and others.

CRESA LEADERSHIP

Tenants need to prepare and plan for a different real estate environment than they’ve experienced over the past five years. Tenants need to:

- Evaluate business/operational forecasts in the near and intermediate term
- Emphasize workplace design-blends express corporate culture and enhances productivity in a changing workforce
- Determine space requirements – translates operational forecasts into space needs
- Create a real estate strategic plan – this should include an Action Plan component to take advantage of current market conditions while addressing future space needs
- Cresa can lead, assist and collaborate in each of these areas, from

What business tool can help you save both time and money while also enabling you to reach your customers personally?

The simple answer is business aviation. The business airplane is a multiplier of efficiency and productivity. In fact, 85 percent of companies that rely on business aviation are small to mid-size enterprises. For many business missions, it saves both time and money. People who fly on these airplanes are business owners, salespeople, engineers and technicians who use the travel time to continue working, meeting with or assisting customers, and even make several stops in a single day. They are finding that flying privately allows them greater convenience, comfort and privacy. It enables them to generate a level of productivity that even flying business- or first-class by commercial airlines is unable to provide.

Airlines serve fewer than 500 U.S. airports, while private aircraft have access to more than 5,000. Traveling privately with your colleagues affords you the opportunity to make more efficient use of the aircraft, increasing on-board productivity while reducing per-seat costs. By controlling your own schedule, you can also manage the high cost of time away from your business, as well as the added expense of hotels, rental cars and miscellaneous expenditures resulting from unnecessary overnight stays generated by airline scheduling limitations.

As a leader since 1987 in the client-focused private aircraft arena, West Coast Aircraft Sales specializes in maximizing client positions during the purchase, sale and operation of aircraft around the globe. Our industry-leading, up-to-the-minute market research, coupled with our hands-on approach to each project consistently enables us to provide results that exceed expectations. Each project is custom tailored to meet the specific requirements of the individual client, with WCAS overseeing every step of the transaction from inception to completion.

We maintain strategic alliances with all major aircraft manufacturers, as well as a variety of industry-leading aviation companies and have an extensive and impressive track record in both the new, pre-owned and delivery position markets.

Additionally, as part of West Coast Aviation Services, a large, highly respected international operator of private aircraft, partnering with West Coast Aircraft Sales affords you access to numerous other benefits including opportunities for charter revenue, aircraft upgrades, premium pricing on maintenance, fuel, insurance, hangar storage and even crew training. Times have changed and the way we work has changed, but for many organizations the performance review process unfortunately, has not. Managers in organizations across the globe dread review time because it is seen as “annoying administrative paperwork” that they can’t wait to check off their list. Employees want the feedback, but many have become disenchanted with reviews lacking substance given by managers who a) may not know how to conduct an effective performance review or b) simply aren’t engaged in the process. It’s time for organizations to review their review process. In addition to the negative perceptions of performance reviews that have permeated the workplace, the way we work has changed. In the today’s knowledge economy, most work is team-based while performance reviews remain focused on individuals. The way companies operate and organize their workforce has changed. So, why are our performance assessments the same? Even if you’ve moved the process online, are you asking the same questions and measuring the same attributes? And further, are managers across your organization properly trained to conduct reviews consistently and effectively?

Organizations that want to create a high-performance culture and develop the next generation of leaders need to re-think their process while re-invigorating their managers to look at performance assessments in a new light. Here are some fundamental guidelines we believe any organization can benefit from when re-evaluating the review process.

Train Your Managers
In many organizations across various industries or sizes, people often move up the ladder because they are good at what they do, not necessarily because they are good managers. When people are promoted to management positions, management training is often overlooked. Since performance reviews are an important element of talent management, companies should take a close look at how they are guiding and training managers (especially newly minted ones) on providing effective feedback.

Better align strategic business objectives to individual performance goals. A key element to more effective performance reviews is being able to tie them to strategic business objectives. However, managers must also remember to refine performance metrics as the business strategy evolves over time.

Start Planning Today!
The War for Talent survey by McKinsey & Co. reports also showed the most important corporate resource over the next 20 years will be talent. If you start by focusing on creating a cultural shift within your organization that leverages performance reviews as a valuable asset you are on the right path in achieving more effective talent management. The time, energy and resources invested to help strengthen your review process, will be time well spent.

Why Teach Teenagers Entrepreneurship?

It’s never too early to teach teens business, according to Stephen Christensen, dean of the business school at Concordia University and founder of the Teen Entrepreneur Academy (TEA). With the ever-changing and highly competitive global economy creating new standards of employment, entrepreneurship has become not only popular, but essential for job creation and growth. Business leaders acknowledge the relevance and importance of entrepreneurship as an educational and economic catalyst, making the need for youth entrepreneurship programs more evident than ever. What better environment to host TEA than entrepreneurial Orange County, a hotbed of technology, innovation and business startups? TEA fosters the development of a business-savvy workforce that ultimately supports the region’s and America’s economic vitality. It’s ideal training for the next generation of entrepreneurs and CEOs who possess a free enterprise and self-responsibility mindset.

TEA is a hands-on training program for high school students who want to learn entrepreneurship, business principles and how to start their own businesses. Students spend one week at the University living, learning and working on their business startup plans. Over 200 high school students from six states and three countries have participated in the TEA over the past three summers. The next Academy is July 12-18, 2015 and its Business Plan competition, with a $1,000 prize, is on Friday, July 17, 2015.

A 2011 national Gallup survey of high school students found that:

► 86 percent wished they had more business classes
► 7 out of 10 said they want to start their own business

Helping teenagers embrace entrepreneurship yields practical life skills, financial awareness and priceless rewards for them to succeed in business and life. TEA is another step in teenagers climbing that ladder of their own success, empowering them to pursue their dreams.

Five Reasons to Teach Entrepreneurship to High School Students
1. Job Creation and Economic Growth
2. Real World Experience
3. Curriculum Missing From High School
4. Applied Learning
5. College Preparation

TEA defines success as “having confidence, the ability to communicate, and joyfully using passion and vision to generate cash flow and provide service to others.” Please explore TEA, consider the implications and determine what your role might be.

If a large portion of your wealth is tied up in a family business, you may find that your estate planning goals conflict with succession-planning goals. If the value of your business is substantially greater than the gift and estate tax exemption (currently $5.43 million), traditional estate planning techniques would have you transfer the business to your children or other family members as early as possible in order to remove future appreciation from your estate.

From a succession-planning perspective, however, handing over the reins to the younger generation may be premature. Perhaps the next generation of leaders isn’t yet ready to take over the business. Or maybe you’re not ready to give up control. Fortunately, there are several trust-based tools that allow you to transfer business interests to your successors now—minimizing gift and estate taxes—while maintaining control of the business. Two to consider are the grantor retained annuity trust (GRAT) and a sale to an intentionally defective irrevocable trust (IDIT).

GRATs

With GRATs, you transfer business interests to an irrevocable trust, which pays you a fixed annuity for a set number of years. When the trust term ends, the assets are transferred to your children or other beneficiaries. You control the business during the trust term and continue to earn income in the form of annuity payments. For this technique to work, the business must generate sufficient income to fund the annuity payments.

In addition to removing future business appreciation from your taxable estate, a GRAT minimizes any gift tax liability on your initial transfer of interests to the trust. That’s because the value for gift tax purposes is equal to the actuarial value of your beneficiaries’ future interest in the trust. By adjusting the length of the trust term and the size of the annuity payments, you can reduce the value to a very low amount—even to zero in some cases.

The main disadvantage of a GRAT is mortality risk. In order for you and your family to enjoy the tax benefits of this technique, you must survive the trust term. If you don’t, trust assets will be pulled back into your taxable estate.

IDITs

Another powerful tool for obtaining tax benefits while retaining control of your business is a sale to an IDIT. A properly designed IDIT is an irrevocable trust for gift and estate tax purposes, but it’s treated as a grantor trust for income tax purposes (that’s the “defect”). Because the trust is irrevocable, business interests you transfer to it are considered to be completed gifts, so any future appreciation in their value escapes estate taxes. At the same time, grantor trust status offers two important benefits:

1. As grantor, you pay income taxes on the trust’s earnings, allowing trust assets to grow tax-free, leaving more for your beneficiaries (essentially, an additional tax-free gift).
2. For income tax purposes, a grantor trust is considered your alter ego rather than a separate entity, so any payments you receive from the trust are treated as tax-free payments to yourself.

Structuring the transaction as an installment sale rather than a gift offers additional benefits. So long as the business generates enough income to cover the installment payments (or is able to borrow the necessary funds), selling the business to an IDIT avoids gift taxes. Once the note is paid, trust assets pass to your beneficiaries tax-free. During the trust term, the installment payments provide you with a tax-free income stream.

Installment sales should be structured carefully to ensure the transaction passes muster with the IRS. Also, while the assets won’t be included in your estate if you don’t survive the trust term, your estate may be subject to tax on the note’s unpaid balance.

What’s your succession plan?

If you own a family business, it’s critical to have a succession plan that covers both the transfer of ownership and, ultimately, the transfer of control. Bear in mind that the ownership-transfer strategies we’ve discussed are complex, and all of the nuances aren’t covered here. Whether you use these tools or other techniques, your tax advisors can help you design a plan that meets your business, financial and estate planning needs.

UMC started in 2011, and has risen to be one of the fastest-growing companies in Orange County, ranking No. 8 on the Orange County Business Journal’s list in 2014. The founder, Matthew Libman, at 25 years old in 2011 was working 9 to 5 at a company similar to United Medical Credit. He saw so many faults in the way the business was being run, and knew that the industry was in need of a more efficient competitor. Libman saw that the big banks were not approving patients, so he rushed to fill the gap in the market. Today, he is taking a team of talented individuals who thrived upon the daunting task of strategically guiding others through the peaks and valleys of their careers. Not only is McCasland involved in the day-to-day operations of regularly placing more than 100 senior executive consultants in accounting and finance projects, but she also manages the business in the technology, financial and administrative divisions of the firm. In the last year, the team has doubled in size, and the company has expanded to introduce new lines of business to further serve their clients and consultants. Through McCasland’s leadership, Vaco Orange County has also introduced a mentoring program at the firm to guide young, new talent to long-term success within Vaco and in the employment services industry.

Workforce Solutions Group, Foothill Ranch
Pamela Jung, Founder

Pamela Jung, and a partner, created Workforce Solutions Group in 2001 with a primary focus on direct hire placement across all business sectors. A few years later, in response to the high demand for health care employees, she created HealthCare as a separate brand dedicated exclusively to the health care market. HCT operates as its own entity under the WSG group of companies. From 2001 to 2007, the organizations experienced tremendous growth. Then, the economy took a downturn. Jung cut operating expenses, re-organizing loans with banks, and was forced to survive on a cash-only basis, as all credit lines and credit cards were cut or frozen. In order to turn the company around, Jung decided to focus the company in commercial real estate, as she felt it was recession proof. Her strategy worked as the company has grown to over $19 million with a 60+ employees and offices in Orange County, Los Angeles and Northern California.
